Tipi Love

Don't struggle with two hour multi-pole family tents again. This 5m tipi pops up in twenty minutes thanks to its' single, central pole design. It folds away into a duffle bag to fit into the boot of a car.

These tipis can hold a wood-burning stove, having a flue hole in the top and a rain cap that fits around it. The sewn-in, thick rubberised ground-sheet ensures that standing water is not a problem. We promise you will never go back to a normal tent.

Tipi Erection

1

Remove Tipi From Duffle Bag

Shake/pull the tipi from its duffle bag. Clear the ground of stones or thorns. Unfold the tipi ground sheet down, canvas side up, so that it sits in a circle on the ground.

2

Peg Out The Circle

Using slim ground pegs, peg out the rubber ground sheet first, pull it as flat as possible before pegging to the ground. Pegs go into ground at a 45 degree angle, head away from the tipi.

3

Elongate the Pole

The tipi is designed to be held up by a single central 3m pole. This pole can be broken down into sections held together by strong elastic, so that it is easily transportable. Slot the pole sections together to make one long pole. Put the two rubber caps on each end. Then find and open the tipi door in the flat canvas.

4

Erecting the Tipi

With the pole in your hand crawl into the flat canvas via the open door. Find the centre of the tipi roof (the cone) and put one rubber clad end of the pole into the cap pushing up the tipi into an upright position. Aim to get the other end of the pole (with rubber cap on) in the centre of the tipi floor where the reinforced square is.

5

Pegging Out the Canvas

As you are pushing the pole upright to get it straight, you will meet a bit of resistance at the bottom and may need help to hoik the pole up as you slide the base into position. Once the pole is upright, go outside and peg out the canvas using the loops at the bottom of the canvas. So you will have a set of pegs through the ground sheet and a second circle of pegs for the canvas.

6

Pegging Out The Guy Ropes

In addition to the pegs in the ground sheet and around the bottom of the canvas you will want to peg out the guy ropes. There are lots of YouTube videos on how to use guy ropes for best effect. Keep guy ropes tightened each day to help the canvas shed water and deflect wind.
